

Meg Rithmire is the James E. Robison Professor in the Business, Government, and the International Economy Unit at Harvard Business School, where she has taught since 2011. She holds a PhD in Government from Harvard University, and BA in Chinese Studies and International Studies from Emory University. Her expertise is in political economy and international relations, with a focus on Asia, China, and China and the United States. Her first book (Land Bargains and Chinese Capitalism, Cambridge University Press, 2015) examines the role of land development and real estate in China's economic development. Her second book (Precarious Ties, Oxford University Press, 2023) compares state-business relations and financial liberalization in China, Malaysia, and Indonesia. Her work on China's politics and economy, international financial engagements, and relationship with the US has been published in a variety of scholarly journals, and her commentary has appeared in The Atlantic, the Washington Post, Foreign Affairs, and more. She is currently co-chairing an initiative on Business Geopolitical Risk and Readiness at the US Chamber of Commerce Foundation, and frequently speaks to business groups and government agencies about China and global business. She speaks fluent Mandarin and has spent seven years in China. She is a two-time winner of the HBS Faculty Teaching award. She is a member of the editorial boards of the China Quarterly and the China Journal, a board member of the Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs at the Harvard Kennedy School, a founding member of the Harvard University Faculty Committee on Southeast Asia, and a faculty affiliate at the Harvard Asia Center, the Fairbank Center for Chinese Studies, the Mossavar-Rahmini Center for Business and Government, and the Weatherhead Center for International Affairs. At the Weatherhead Center, she co-chairs a research initiative on "Regions in a Multipolar World," and she runs the seminar on the Chinese economy at the Fairbank Center for International Affairs.
